Excerpt: . . . 11 for authorizing ARPA - E in the America COMPETES Act and for appropriating 400 million in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009. I am very excited about this opportunity to identify and invest in high-risk, high-payoff research and development that can transform our domestic and global energy landscape. As you know, ARPA - E was modeled after DARPA, which was created in 1958 in response to the launch of Sputnik when it was felt that the United States had lost its technological lead. The United States now faces three Sputnik-like challenges: energy security, U. S. technological lead, and greenhouse gas emissions and climate change. In many cases, we as a Nation are lagging behind, and we need to change course with fierce urgency. ARPA - Es goal is to help catalyze this change. Let me give you a quick report of where we are now and some thoughts on how to move forward. The first funding opportunity announcement received an overwhelming response from the technical community: 3, 700 concept papers, 340 full proposals, and, after a thorough review process, 37 proposals selected for award at an average of 4 million each. These projects were selected based on the impact on our mission, innovative technical approaches, superb teams, opportunities for the United States to gain leadership and to pursue technologies that are underserved by other parts of DOE and the private sector. If successful, these technologies could be game-changing and launch new opportunities for American businesses and jobs. The 150 million of ARPA - E investment in this round catalyzed an additional 33...
