Captain Barbor¹ was taken ill on Sunday night last, and was dead at ten this morning; his fever was violent in the extreme. I am sorry to say the fleet begins to be sickly, but I hope and trust we shall recover when we get to sea. This is a vile place; we can get no refreshments for our people, but in so scanty a manner as is not to be conceived by those who have been² at Jamaica.--June 12th, 8 P.M. 1 Robert Barbor, captain of the Fame. The so-called memoir in Charnock (vi. 348) misspells the name, gives a wrong date of the death, and shows a curious ignorance of the details...
