Excerpt: . photograph shows a flame is less than 5 millimeters high, notify the explosives engineer before averaging; otherwise average regardless of variation. SMALL IMPACT TEST. The small impact machine is used in the determination of the relative sensitiveness of explosives to explosion, as indicated by the blow of a known mass of steel dropped from varying heights. In each trial the charge of explosive used is 0.02 gram, to be taken from the middle of an original cartridge. After the charge has been weighed on a chemical balance, the charge is wrapped in tinfoil and placed in a desiccator (containing no desiccating material). The charge as used is transferred from the tinfoil onto an anvil and spread out in the form of a flat disk having a diameter of 1 centimeter. The lower face of the plunger has a diameter of 1 centimeter. Previous...
