The direction-post that I lanetl agin wasnt more fixed than was myself, and I kapes a stedfast gaze, unfortunit divil that I was, until I felt my very heart craping up to my eyes, jest to have a look. The thing was done, and from that moment I had a mortal unasiness upon me, and I found that I was over head and ears in love with McBridess daughter and her snow-white nightcap. From that day forards I couldnt prevint myself from having all my corn ground at the mill in very small parcels, and warnt my feelings ground and ground, and my heart almost a dhry powder with continually looking into Mary McBrides bright blue eyes, and feeling her merry little laughs tingle and ring right to my finger ends, and down to the very soles of my boots. Oh, Morris! Morris! I should say thats the same thing as being what Father McGrath calls lictrified. Every day did I meander home, and one day, grown desperate, I knocked a hole in the side of my house, and put a windy in, that I might sit and smoke and look towards her garden. And there, sure enough, airly one morning, I saw her cap bobbing up and down the fur side of the edge, so I crept gently across the meadows, screwing up my heart to spake out like a man, and know at once whether Id shoot myself....
