The original cast of his mind was of a philosophico-judicial nature. He intuitively sought a relationship among things observable by the human mind. Nothing in the universe stood out isolated from and unrelated to the Cosmos as a whole; and the Cosmos itself was, to him, but a manifestation of a related Infinite Eternal Unknowable, forever inscrutable in the reality of His existence to the finite mind of man: without whom the world would become like the shadow of a vision, and thought itself would vanish.
