This pdf is wonderful. It really is written in simple terms instead of hard to understand. It's been developed in an exceedingly simple way and it is just after I finished reading this ebook in which I in fact modified me, altered the way in my opinion.

Excerpt: . . . of workers using existing capital: Expansion Capacity Desired Change in Capacity (1) Increase in Capacity From Replacing Depreciated Capital Change in Capacity of Non-Depreciated Capital. Several steps are required to go from the verbal equation (1) to an expression for ag-gregate investment. First, one must determine the conditions under which equation (1), governing decisions about investment made by each business, also governs ag-gregate investment. The second step is to solve equation (1) for expansion capacity in a frictionless world where there is no lag between the time that new capacity is needed and the time it is installed. The third step is to determine the optimal size of new machines. In the next step, I combine information on expansion capacity, capacity of replacement machines, and machine size into an expression for aggregate investment in each type of capital in a frictionless world. The fth step is to add simple dynamics, in which there is a xed time to build between the time that new capacity is needed and the time that it is installed. In the nal step, I enrich the dynamics to include multiple times to build and diering time lags for the eects of output and the cost of capital. This section concludes with two subsections discussing the properties of the invest-ment equations. The rst of those examines the eects of demand shocks and productivity shocks on investment. The second highlights the dierences between the investment model of this paper and the standard neoclassical investment model. 3. 1...
